Beyond Science and Religion:

“The Dearest Freshness Deep Down Things”

Kent Library’s Sadie’s Place

Darwin’s “Origin of Species” first published in 1859, sparked a wide variety of reactions from the scientific and religious communities. Today there is no serious scientific debate over the general ideas of evolutionary biology. Let us assume that the scientific consensus is basically accurate as a description of physical phenomena; is it also sufficient as a world view for a human life? If not, how may insights from religion illuminate our modern world view to produce a more genuinely meaningful, holistic perspective? We invite the community to begin imagining the deep processes that underlie our reality which scientists and theologians attempt to grasp from divergent traditions.

The presentation is open to all and refreshments will be served.
