See the World by Backpack: a Primer for Independent Traveling

Wednesday, Nov. 4, 2009

6:30 p.m.

in Sadie's Place

Have you always wanted to see the world but never took the leap because of the expense; or traveling by tour bus is not your idea of truly experiencing a different culture; or maybe you just did not know how to get started on that once in a lifetime experience? Whatever your reason, this presentation is intended to give you some tips on how to take the road less traveled independently and with a budget in mind (with a few pictures thrown in to show you what the world has to offer....).

Dr. Diane L. Wood (Assistant Professor of Biology) has multiple years of experience traveling by backpack. Her most recent trip took her around the world in two and a half months, visiting 14 different countries for less than $7,000.

If you are thinking this type of travel is only for young people, think again, as Diane celebrated her fiftieth birthday while on this trip.

The presentation is free and refreshments will be served.

Library Hosts: Ed Buis, Matt Olsen, and Phyllis Sanders
